Why did I choose this study programme?

Since my bachelor's studies, I have acquired a passion for Public Health and knew I wanted to pursue it further. When I came across the Global Public Health Program at Deggendorf Institute of Technology, it felt like the perfect fit. The curriculum had everything I was looking for.

My personal tip for you:

Be open to Cultural Diversity. Global Public Health is an international field and you will study with people from all over the world. This means you will not only learn about different healthcare systems but also experience new cultures. You will make friends from different backgrounds, share ideas and gain a global perspective on health challenges. Being open-minded and willing to learn from others will make your experience even more enriching.

Good to know:

The field is vast and interdisciplinary, requiring knowledge of epidemiology, economics, laws and technologies.

That's what I particularly like about my course of studies:

I appreciate the international learning environment, where I engage with students and professors from different backgrounds.

That's why you should study at DIT/ECRI:

DIT is known for its strong focus on applied sciences and international collaboration. Studying in Pfarrkirchen offers a peaceful and student-friendly environment with access to excellent academic resources. The university provides modern facilities, expert faculty and a global network making an ideal place to gain a high-quality education in public health.

That's why you should study this course of studies:

If you care about health and want to make a real impact, this field is worth considering. Global Public Health is a field where you can work on meaningful projects, help improve healthcare systems and even contribute to solving global challenges like pandemics and health inequalities.

My best experience during my studies:

So far, my experience has been really rewarding. The course is challenging but interesting and I have learned so much about health policies, epidemiology, economics and technologies. What stands out the most is the people I have met. I now have friends from all over the world and we have had great experiences together. Studying here has definitely expanded my perspective, both academically and personally.
